We are still unable to announce any arrivals from Europe, but we may indulge the hope of soon receiving direct intelligence up to the month of May. From the other Presidencies there is little of importance. It is reported that the Siamese have determined on joining the Bhurmese, and that the Emperor of China, though not inclined to take an active part in the war against his old friends the English, will probably assume the part of mediator between the contending parties. Such, at least, are the on dits in Arracan.

The Cornwall, we understand, will sail for England on or about Sunday week.

In a former number we adverted to the timely precautions that had been adopted by Government to mitigate the threatened distress from want of water, of which the state of the public wells and tanks, caused by an almost total failure of the last monsoon, justified alarming apprehensions. In the measures which were sanctioned for the attainment of that object, the views of the Government were not confined to the relief of the immediate exigency, but prospectively extended to an ascertainment of what were the resources of the island, and in guarding against the recurrence of a scarcity of water, by enlarging and deepening the different reservoirs. Three fifths of the public wells, and all the tanks, had become dry before the month of April, all of which were deepened and improved, and about thirty wells, that had been filled up for years past, from not being required in ordinary seasons, and from being incommodiously situated, were reopened. Temporary wells were also sunk, and new permanent ones constructed in various parts of the Island, and, in fact, every measure was adopted that was likely to assist in securing the community from a failure of one of the most necessary articles of life; and we firmly believe that had Government not taken the timely steps that were pursued, much distress and misery would have prevailed.

Out of those works, which have been nearly completed at the expense of Government, it may be noticed, that few of the old, and most of the new, Esplanade wells alone continued to afford a supply of water during the latter part of the fair season,—to these, and these only, the inhabitants of the town resorted in crowds, by night as well as by day, for water for almost all purposes, which caused the price of this article (at all times a vendible commodity throughout the greater part of the city) to rise from 8 to 24 reas per chatty of about five gallons, the unbuilt wells in more distant situations having afforded to the last a supply that went greatly to relieve the distress elsewhere experienced.

To the liberality of Government the public is also indebted for a contribution last year of 20,000 Rupees, for completing on an enlarged scale the Byculla tank, in which there is, for the first time, a body of water apparently sufficient, not only for supplying the increased demands about to be made on it in that neighbourhood, but to justify the expectation that this central and spacious reservoir may be rendered subservient to more extended purposes of general amelioration.

The less useful from their situation, tho' more costly works of a like nature, that have been constructed within the same period, by the liberality of private individuals, are, the Breach and Sion tanks, the former a charitable donation by TOOLSIDASS GOPALLDASS, upon which he has expended 60,000 Rupees, the latter by TOOLSIDASS CALLIANJEE, on which he has expended 20,000 Rupees; in the advantages of which, however, from the Dhurrumsallas with which they are to be surrounded, it is to be apprehended, that the Hindoo portion of the community will chiefly, if not exclusively, participate. One point has been satisfactorily put to rest by the experience of last season, which is, that though distress may be felt from a failure of the monsoon, from the distance to which individuals must resort to obtain water, yet the Esplanade may be depended upon as an inexhaustible source of supply, good water being found at the depth of ten feet. Independent of that resource, many of the families laid in a stock of water, and supplied themselves from the Islands in the harbour of Bombay.

We are happy to learn that the Rev. Thomas Robinson, the Chaplain of Poona, on taking leave of that station on Sunday the 24th of July, made an appeal on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, with especial reference to the Institution of Bishop's College near Calcutta; on which occasion the collection amounted to 380 Rupees. We rejoice to find that the churches at the outstations are beginning to follow the example of the Presidency in this good cause.

Among the strangers who have from time to time visited Bombay, we beg to mention the name of the Chevalier Domeny de Rienzi, who lately arrived here by way of the Red Sea. This young French savant is well known by his travels to Mount Caucasus, in Barbary, in Syria, among the Druses, in America, the Orkneys, Greece, &c. It is to be hoped he will give to the public his recent travels in the three Arabias, to Mount Sinai, Taief, in the plains of Hali and Betelfaki, to Surakem, to Hinterab and in Abyssinia. These travels would be more interesting, as the Chevalier de Rienzi is the first European who has ever visited the country between Mount Samen and Assab, and the vicinity of the Antient Adulis. Several gentlemen in Bombay have had the satisfaction of inspecting the collection of inscriptions, antiques, plants, minerals, and other curiosities, brought by the Chevalier de Rienzi from antient Ethiopia, besides the various drawings he made during his travels.

The Chevalier de Rienzi has acquired a reputation in Europe by the publication of several little works of a philosophical, scientific, religious, and political nature, but principally by some considerable pieces in verse, such as PHILIP THE 2D AND THE INQUISITION, a tragedy,—An Epistle to JOACHIM MURAT--LE BARDE VOYAGEUR, a poem--AN ELEGY ON THE DEATH OF MADAME DE STAEL—and another on the death of NAPOLEON—A DISCOURSE ON LIBERTY, in verse, addressed to General La Fayette—A HYMN to their common friend the illustrious General Kosciusko—also the poetry and the music of an opera entitled LES AMOURS DU TASSE, or LE GENIE MALHEUREUX, as well as the two cantatas LE COMPOSITEUR AMOUREUX and L'APOTHEOSE DE FINGAL PERE D'OSSIAN. The Chevalier is likewise the author of various pieces of Italian poetry, and more particularly one entitled IL LAMENTO DI TASSO, which was printed in Italy previous to the publication of a poem under the same title by Lord Byron, and it is remarked in many English and French journals, as being a curious circumstance that both the BARDE VOYAGEUR and IL LAMENTO DI TASSO of Rienzi, should have appeared before the publication of CHILDE HAROLD and the LAMENT of TASSO by the Noble Lord.

The Chevalier de Rienzi was for some time actively employed in supporting the cause of the Greeks, and served in the rank of a General. A wound which he received before Athens obliged him to retire from the service, and we understand he has entirely abandoned the field of war and politics, in order to devote himself to the more soothing culture of science, literature, and the arts. We regret we have not room to insert in our present number a patriotic song, dedicated by him to the Hellenists, and which was twice translated into the Greek language, and chaunted by part of the patriot army. The Chevalier de Rienzi is descended from the celebrated Tribune Rienzi, whom Lord Byron has emphatically styled—THE LAST OF THE ROMANS.

The following paragraph from the English Chronicle of the 3d February is rather interesting. It shews that the Autocrat of Rnssia is feeling his way in a certain direction :—

"St. Petersburgh Jan. 8.—For some years past (says a letter from Orenburgh) there has been a very great decline in the commerce carried on upon the Asiatic frontier, because the communications with the neighbouring provinces of Asia were much obstructed by the numerous predatory hordes. These inconveniences are now entirely removed by a special order of his Majesty the Emperor, who has been pleased to command that every caravan to Buchara and China shall be accompanied by a strong military escort, provided with the necessary horse artillery. One caravan only now goes from Orenburgh every year; two others join it on the way : so that the whole together consist of 1,800 camels. Mr. Kaidelon, merchant at Orenburgh, is at the head of the merchants who carry on this trade. There is every reason to hope that this commerce on the frontier will, by the unabating care of our beloved Sovereign, recover its former importance.—Frankfort Papers, Jan. 26."

The following formidable paragraph from the NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, is worthy of the attention of our military readers :—

"One cheering principle would result from the use of steam weapons in war, viz. that it would give the most civilized nations the advantage, and tend to make the wisest still more powerful. England, America, and France might adopt them in the fullest extent; but Russia, Turkey, and even Austria, in their present state, would have little chance against the scientific combinations, and the mechanical adroitness that could perfect a hundred effective steam engines, while they laboriously proced one. The natives of England, France, and America will ere long, be navigated and fought by steam. On shore, the art of war will be quickly changed to the advantage of humanity. In the field, battles will be quickly terminated. No dense smoke will arise to intercept the deadly aim of the steam weapon; and masses of men can not be manauvred under the showers of balls which steam-batteries will pour upon them. Defensive positions will in many cases be impregnable; and small fortified ports will take an enormous time to reduce. Let us suppose a fortification casemated and bomb proof, with steam guns 60 pounders. The walls would literally rain upon the besiegers metal of this enormous weight, every gun projecting 50 or 60 balls a minute. In case of attempting an escalade, or of storming a breach, if one could be made in the face of the besieged under such a defensive fire, not a man would pass the ditch alive, while it was flanked by a single gun, such a hail of death might be poured forth with unceasing energy. England will fortunately have no difficulty in getting the start of other countries in forming a steam navy. Its elements are peculiarly her own, and if the prejudices of the Navy-board give way to the necessity of the case, she will have nothing to dread. The steam-gun, in its present incomplete state, has been tried before the Duke of Wellington, and I understand, as far as the experiment went, its efficiency was not called in question a moment." "Whatever contributes to protract a state of warfare, will by increasing its expences, operate in a way friendly to the interests of humanity. Governments, however inclined to rush heedlessly into war on every feeble excuse, will pause more than ever before they bring about the ruin of their finances. Nations of scanty population will be able to offer a long resistance to the strong, and war will become an affair of defence rather than aggrandizement. A change in the art of war, which may render fortified places impregnable to every thing but famine, or capable of a very protracted defence, will be friendly to the stability and integrity of empires."

MARRIAGE.—At St. Thomas's Church, on the 1st of August, by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Calcutta, Dr. Hugh Smith, Bengal Medical Establishment, to Mary, Second Daughter of John Moore Esquire, Liverpool.

DEATHS.—At Surat, on the 25th ultimo, Arthur Grant, the fifth Son of James Taylor, Esq. of the Civil Service on this Establishment, aged nine months and nineteen days.

On Thursday evening, the 28th ultimo, after a short and painful illness, borne with perfect resignation, Lieut. Col. Commandant Thomas Alexander Cowper, Chief Engineer on this Establishment. To the social qualities of the deceased, which his numerous friends, both in England and in India, have learnt to appreciate, was added an unusually rare assemblage of natural endowments, corrected and highly improved by an active enterprizing and vigorous mind. Col. Cowper had just attained, at the early age of forty five, the summit of his professional duties, and is another melancholy instance of the transitory and uncertain nature of the advantages which man is doomed to enjoy in this life. His perfect resignation to the will of his Creator, in the midst of the greatest domestic happiness, and in the consciousness of just having received the highest reward he could obtain after thirty years service, was truly examplary. As a Civil Engineer, Lieut. Colonel Cowper's attainments were of the first rank of eminence. A fine taste, directed by a superior genius, and corrected by much study, and the actual contemplation of the noblest works of art in Europe, had qualified him to take a place even among the ablest Architects in Great Britain; and the most competent judges here have regretted that he had not a wider field for the display of his abilities. If the Town Hall, now commenced at this Presidency, is ever completed, Col. Cowper's talents as a Civil Engineer will be acknowledged by the public to fall short of his just praise. In the relations of social life, and in the strong and affectionate ties of a father and a husband, it is impossible to do justice to the deceased; in the former his hospitality was unbounded, and his friendships ardent and sincere; in the latter, his death has unloosed bonds of irreparable value. His remains were buried with military honours, and were followed to the grave by as large and respectable an assemblage as was almost ever witnessed. This tribute to the memory of a departed friend, is offered by one who had many opportunities of appreciating his merits.

At Mazagon, on the 29th ultimo, the Infant Son of Mr. J. F. de Jesus, aged 11 months and 15 days.

At Byculla, on the morning of the 31st ultimo, Henry John, aged 19 months, son of the late Reverend John Nicols.

His early life appears involved in obscurity, but he declared himself to be a native of Holland, born in the city of Haarlem on the 4th June 1723. He came out to India in the year 1755, and landed at Madras in the month of June, having then completed his 31st year. He accompanied Sir W. Draper on the expedition to Manilla. On his return thence, he was employed in the Madura and Tinevelly campaigns, and was present at the siege of the former place. He afterwards came with a reinforcement from Madras to Bengal, and was present at the capture of Budge-budge, on the river Hooghly; after which he returned to Madras, and was engaged in an action with the French fleet. He immediately after this served in the war with Hyder Ali, and was present at the siege of Tanjore. He accompanied General Smith and Sir Hector Monro in all their conquests, and assisted in the demolition of the works of Pondicherry, being at that time in the corps of Sappers and Miners. He was subsequently sent to Bombay, with a Regiment of Europeans, a Battalion of Natives, and a company of Artillery under the command of Colonel Browne, were sent to reinforce General Goddard. He served with General Goddard's army during its campaigns in the Guzzerat, and was present at the sieges of Bassein and other strong places.

After a variety of service, peace being concluded with the Maharattas, he came by land across the continent to Cawnpore with a detachment under the command of Captain Hamilton in the year 1786. After proceeding to the Presidency, and his numerous campaigns, his length of service and great age being represented to Lieutenant General Sir Robert Sloper, Commander in Chief, he was pleased to place him on the Invalid Establishment, with the pension of Serjeant. The whole of his faculties remained unimpaired till within a few weeks of his death, when a stroke of apoplexy left him debilitated in mind and body; his memory was excellent, his faculty of acquiring different languages remarkable. By his own account he always lived freely, but seldom exceeded. His sight failed him about three years since, and latterly he was nearly blind. He was a short man, of a robust form, florid complexion, and generally enjoyed excellent health. It is believed that he was the eldest Invalid in India, with the exception of Serjeant Ross at Monghyr.

more property. The defendant was upwards of sixty, and the wife of the plaintiff forty---(A laugh.) The marriage took place as far back as 1809; and since that event the woman, or lady, had borne the plaintiff eight children. But what was a great aggravation in this case, it was impossible to say how many of those children belonged to the plaintiff. The completion of the offence he should be able to prove, from the defendant's own acknowledgment; for it was with him, as it was with many others, that amongst a great deal of knavery, there was mixed no little folly. He would show that the plaintiff had been beast enough to make a declaration of his guilt in a public-house. The fellow is red-haired, and he was brute sufficient to tell the company in this public-house that his stock was better than Wilson's, and that they might be easily known, for they had red hair---(Much laughter.) The wretch had audacity enough to claim two of the children as his own, and it is said that a more correct fac-simile of the rascal could not be produced---(Immense laughter). Yes, true it is, that two of these most unhappy offspring have the unspeakable misfortune to carry the burning shame upon their heads---(Continued laughter.) My learned friend may say, why were they not brought here to-day? That would be a most unseemly thing, to stick the little urchins upon the table, and then make their poor red heads the object of every fool's jest. Besides, there might be people who would maliciously say, why really the children are not unlike his learned friend, the Common Sergeant, or Mr. Reader, or any of the gentlemen of the jury---(Great laughter.) He did not press for heavy damages, but the jury would give such as would teach a man of sixty-one years of age, that he could not throw the reins upon the neck of his passions, and make havoc upon the domestic affections with impunity.

Edward Herbert, the brother-in-law of the plaintiff, and Hannah Herbert, deposed to indecent liberties between the defendant and the plaintiff's wife, and to the existence of the red-haired children.

William Shepherdson examined—I know Bagshaw. I went to Tideswell fair in October, for you must know I had a little business to settle.

Mr. Sergeant VAUGHAN—Never mind your business, but tell us what passed at the public-house between Bagshaw and you.

Witness—Well, Sir, I had a little business to settle, and I went to the public-house, and called for a glass of rum and warter. It was warm.

Mr Sergeant VAUGHAN—Tell us what the defendant Bagshaw said. Never mind about the rum and water.

Witness—But you must hear about Bob Bagshaw first. I had got my rum and warter in my hand, and I had four or five sups at it. Bagshaw says sup it up and ha' a sup wi' me. Nay, says I, I don'ant want any of your rum and warter; I can pay for rum and warter myself. Says he, what have you to say against us, Bob; But I have o're run my story. I should ha' told you that Bob is a butcher and jest out of his time. He is a tidy-made chap enough. Now they tell me that Bob has been arter our Suky; that's my daughter; but I never seed him about the house mysel, never or I should ha' forbid him, that's sure enough, for I do'ant like the breed, its a bad breed in my opinion, and Suke shall never ha' him by my consent. But, says Bagshaw, why won't you let your daughter have Bob? Bekase, s ys I I do'ant like your breed, and never did. Says he Bob is able to get a good living. Say I, that may be, but he shan't have my daughter; I do'ant like the breed, gentlemen, and never did But, says he, Bob would have somethin worth having. Nay, but, says I, he shan't have my daughter though, for all that. Why? says he my breed is not a very bad breed; look at my red-haired stock at Wilson's. The doctor was there; I mean the man-midwife, and he wur dunning Bagshaw for laying Wilson's wife. He was axing Bagshaw for the money for doctoring Wilson's wife when she was brought to bed. Pretty devil of a tale, thinks I, for him to be axing Bagshaw for the money for such a job. I wur vexed bekase I thought Wilson was queerly off; but I heard it talked off for years. Bagshaw said his was a better stock than Wilson's; they had all red hair. He said he had had her with him at his own house.

Cross-examined by Mr. COMMON SERGEANT—I was not very well pleased to hear Bagshaw's talk. There was an old quarrel between us. He is a queerish chap I can tell you. I have several daughters married, and one is married to my brother. He might say, I had better marry her to Bob, than to my brother. We have never been very friendly, for he is a roughish customer. The doctor was joking with him. Oh no. I did'nt rightly understand you, it was no joke. It wur the talk of the old neighbourhoood, and had been for years. I told Wilson about it. He said he had never seen note (nothing) clearly, but he had heard about it often. I said, if you had not you must have bin deaf and dumb; I could ha' found it out years ago if I had been in your place. The youngest of the red haired stock is about five or six years of age, I should think, but I do'ant know exactly. He is a good slapping chap.

During the examination of this witness the whole Court was in a roar of laughter. It was in vain to endeavour to keep him to the point in question. He could not tell any thing, unless he was allowed to talk about his daughter Suke and Bob Bagshaw.

Mr. Baron HULLOCK—What do you think, Mr. Serjeant Vaughan, now of the proposal that was this morning made? I don't see what you can do with such a case as this—but do as you please.

After some consultation the parties agreed to withdraw a Juror.

THE EMIGRANT INDEMNIFICATION LAW.

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES, FEB. 21.

The discussion of the Act of Indemnity was resumed, being the order of the day.

General Foy advanced to the tribune, and delivered himself in these terms.---

"Right and power dispute the possession of the world---right, which determines and secures the privileges of society---power, which subjugates and depresses nations. A project of law is about to be passed, having for object the transfer of the money of the kingdom into the hands of the Emigrants. And have the Emigrants prevailed? No. What is their number? Two to one in this Chamber; one to a thousand in this nation. (Murmurs of disapprobation.) It is not, then, upon power, it is upon right that their claims must be founded. And what is right? It is in acts of Governments, as in those of individuals---a conformity with positive laws, and those eternal principles of reason which form the basis of the Constitution of every kingdom. These laws---the ancient laws o this country---have been recited from the tribune, and in reference to these we have but two questions to decide. Was emigration voluntary or compulsory? What did the Emigrants seek at the hands of strangers? As to the first, it will be answered that the great emigration of the years 1790 and 1791, was in fact voluntary; and that this constituted nine-tenths of the total number in the several emigrations. This will be the answer, and it is true; it is an admission that the emigration might have been compulsory, and that would take from the refugees all the merit of their sacrifices.---(True, true, on the right.) As to the second question, What did the emigrants seek at the hands of strangers? The answer will be 'War in the ranks of the invaders of France! War, under those leaders and with those soldiers, whose ambition and licentiousness, after victory, they were unable to restrain.---(Murmurs again.) For the five years during which the distribution of this immense sum is to be continued, our credit will be depressed, our effective intercourse with foreign powers will be suspended, our place in Europe will be left a void, and France will be as it were a third time invaded and overcome.---(Loud murmurs in several parts of the Chamber.) The President of the Council has rejected several propositions coming from the Members of this House. But, how? Has he directed the thunders of his eloquence gainst doctrines as subversive of the Charter? Has he disclaimed the principle of pretended right which the Minister himself has laid down, all the consequences of which have not yet been strictly deduced by the emigrants themselves? And has he reinstated the objects of this remuneration in their honour and their social rank. (Honour? on the right.) And even though the Minister should promise protection and favour, what are the promises of Ministers worth to-day? Is it in his power to fulfil those promises? What Frenchman is there who knows not the concessions which must be made by Ministers as the price of their pitiful existence. ---(A general laugh.)

The President of the Council.---If we are to believe the Gentlemen opposed to this measure, it can only have the effect of exciting animosities, kindling our evil passions, and leading us from that unanimity and peace which it ought to be the wish of the Government to attain.

M. Duplessis Grenedan.—We should not here confound the present, the past, and the future (interruption, the member repeated the words). The Charter, by the 9th article, declares that property is inviolable; not that it will be so. (Loud murmurs, the Member repeating his expressions a second and third time). This is not a new enactment made for future times; it is an eternal principle applicable to every time; and the first consequence of this principle is, that the property of emigrants could not have been confiscated. If, however, we seek the true interpretation of this clause, it is evident that it renders inviolate that property alone which has been legally acquired; it would be too absurd to suppose that it was intended to secure the possession of property acquired by plunder. (Murmurs.)

M. Dupont.—The result of a political revolution like tha proposed annot admit of doubt. The Charter is no more than a phantom; it is nothing more than a simple combination of the Aristocracy with Ministerial power. This Act of Indemnity will be followed by others of a similar purport. The Clergy, armed with the terrible law of sacrilege. (Angry and violent murmurs on the right, and cries of "Order, you are insulting the Chamber of Peers.") M. Dupont continued The Clergy will next come to demand, in the name of Heaven, enormous indemnification for the past, and rich endowments for the future. You will excite discontent, rather than satisfy cupidity: if you refuse, as an eloquent Member said, to admit all to the splendid banquet, where will emigration find a place. (Murmurs.) You have been already told that this law will satisfy emigrants merely for the present. (Disapprobation, and cries of "Order, order.")

M. de Girardin.—The refugees were traitors to their country.

M. Dupont.---I refer to the celebrated Address against Emigrants, voted by the Legislative Assembly and presented to Louis XVI. by the very person who was the author of it. You all know what was said by M. de Vaublanc to the King when he accepted the Constitution. The Refugees did not attempt to conceal their criminal designs. Who does not know that the army of Conde was for ten years in the pay of our enemies? Who does not know that they offered to cede a portion of the French territories to the Austrians, to obtain their co-operation and the re-establishment of the ancient regime.---(Cries of "Order.") The Coustituti-onal and Legislative Assemblies showed the greatest forbearance towards the Emigrants, nor did they confiscate their properties but as a just measure of retaliation. In 1815, a contribution of 750 millions of francs was imposed upon us by a foreign power, but they had at least the rights of conquerors. The Emigrants cannot boast of such a victory, and if they did they would never be believed.

M. de Vaublanc.---As the Member who has just concluded has done me the honour to introduce my name, I must naturally be anxious to reply, and I therefore entreat the attention of my colleagues. From the very beginning of the discussion upon the measure, to which that Member has alluded, the factious party had sworn not only the destruction of the throne, but even the extermination of the Royal Family. It then became necessary to organise an army of observation for the security of the King. This army was raised, but the Minister of War, who could not accomplish this with government bills, required thirty millions of specie, which were granted. He set out for the frontier, accompanied by a man whose personal qualities and illustrious name ought to revive feelings of loyalty in every soldier ("La Fayette!" from several Members.) This General was afterwards obliged to enter upon his defence for his conduct at that juncture. I undertook his defence. Marat and the other pamphleteers of that period were furious in their denunciations against me, and even in the presence of the Legislative Body the dreadful cry was sometimes heard of "Give us the head of Vaublanc, or all is lost."

Scientific Barbarity. --We are happy to state, that the following declaration has been signed by thirt -eight Physicians, and other Medical Professors at Bath:---

"BATH, FEB. 27.

"We, whose names are underwritten, Medical persons, chiefly practitioners, resident at Bath, do hereby engage and declare that we will, as far as in us lies, prevent and discourage by our example, influence, and dissuasion, those painful and cruel anatomical experiments upon living animals which, to the disgrace of science, in our opinion, are made, sometimes without necessity or u[illegible] and frequently without any adequate end, under the plea of promoting medical knowledge. The gratification of mere curiosity, the illustration of favorite but unessential theories, or the repetition of any known and conclusive experiment, we consider very insufficient motives for the infliction of torture. We do thus protest against, and reprobate such conduct, esteeming it wholly unwarrantable and discreditable to our profession. And we earnestly recommend this subject to the serious consideration of all students in anatomy; entreating them, under a sense of moral principle, not to be misled herein, by the practices of others, who have thoughtlessly (as we hope) but unfortunately, degraded researches otherwise so meritorious and important."

THE EMIGRANTS' FAREWELL.

(From "The Legend of Genevi ve, with other Tales and Poems, By Delta." Just Published.)

Green Albyn, farewell; though by us never more
Should be welcomed the hills that encircle thy shore:
Though to far distant worlds, 'tis our fortune to roam,
Still to thee shall we look as the land of our home!

Green Albyn, farewell! though thou fadest on our sight.
Are the deeds of our fathers not written in light?
And cannot the tones of the pibroach display,
How they march'd to the field, how they won in the fray?

Green Albyn, farewell! though to us be not given,
For our country to strive, as our fathers have striven,
'Tween their ashes and us, though may roll the dark sea,
Still their spirit is ours, and our hearts are with thee.

Green Albyn, farewell! though the glens of our pride,
Through the mist of the morn, shall no more be descried,
Nor the deer on the hill; nor the cairn on the moor;
Nor the chief in the hall;—we are thine as of yore!

Green Albyn, farewell! when our footsteps shall stray,
On the banks where Lake Erie expands to the day,
In our bonnets the rough-bearded thistle shall twine,
And be dear to our souls, as a symbol of thine!

Green Albyn, farewell; to thy rocks, to thy rills,
To the eagles that build on the crest of thy hills.
To the lake, to the forest, the moor and the dell.
To thee, and thy children, green Albyn, farewell!

ANSWER TO O'DOHERTY'S FAREWELL TO SCOTLAND.

Go, get thee gone, thou dastardly loon,
Go, get thee to thine own countrie;
If ever you cross the Border again,
The muckle diel accompany thee,
There's mony a tree in fair Scotland,
And there's ane, the gallows tree,
On which we hang the Irish rogues,
A fitting place it is for thee.

Go, get thee gone, thou dastardly loon,
Too good for thee is brose and kale:—
We've lads and ladies gay in the land,
Bonny lasses, and nut brown ale,
When thou geest to merry Carlisle,
Welcome take thy loud laughters three;
But know that the most of our beggarly clan,
Came from the Holy Land, like thee.

Go, get thee gone, thou beggarly loon,
On thee our maidens refused to smile:—
Our pipers they scorn'd to beg from thee,
A half-starved knight of the Emerald Isle.
Go rather and herd thy father's pigs.
And feed on 'tatoes and butter milk;
But return not to the princely North.
Land of the tartan, the bonnet, and kilt.
